Market Outlook – Equity Markets are Likely to Remain Volatile

- The contributors to market volatility include:
 1. The Economic Impact of the Coronavirus: At first, the impact of the coronavirus was supply related as parts of China shut down, limiting the availability of Chinese-produced goods. Increasingly, the impact is more demand related as travel globally has become restricted, and business meetings have been canceled. Global economic growth is declining and may ultimately reach recessionary levels depending on how soon the spread of the virus is contained.
 2. Financial Stress Induced by Declining Growth and Lower Oil Prices: About half of the investment-grade bond market consists of BBB-rated bonds. Lower GDP (gross domestic product) increases the default risk as does lower oil prices for BBB issuers in the energy industry.
 3. The US Presidential Election: Declining economic growth increases the probability that the next president will be a Democrat. This would likely result in more regulation and higher taxes, both of which would be negative for stocks.
- Ultimately, the severity of the decline in equities is tied mostly to how significant an impact the coronavirus has on US and global growth. In our view, the most likely scenario is a “U” shaped recovery, in which economic growth declines for at least a couple of quarters and then recovers gradually with the support of accommodative monetary policy and fiscal stimulus, such as a payroll tax cut.
- Given the difficulty in predicting the depth of the decline and the timing of the recovery, we believe the most prudent approach to investing in US equities is to hold shares of companies that we believe have manageable debt levels, high-profit margins and stable, competitive positions.

Fund Positioning – Defensively Positioned in Attractively Valued Equities of Sustainable Businesses

- Pioneer Fund seeks to invest in attractively valued equities of businesses that are sustainable from an ESG (environmental, social, governance), competitive and financial perspective. This approach is designed to mitigate downside risk while maintaining strong upside participation when markets are rising.
- With respect to positioning, the Fund is overweight relative to the S&P 500[®] Index in consumer staples and health care, both of which are defensive sectors. It is underweight real estate and utilities as many stocks in those sectors are overvalued in our view, due to investor appetite for yield in a low interest rate environment.
- The Fund is also underweight the energy sector. Falling demand due to slowing global growth and excess supply due to OPEC (Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries) make the outlook for the sector unfavorable in our view.
- The steep decline in US equities has provided an opportunity to “high grade” the portfolio, adding stocks that were on the watch list, but not in the portfolio due to their high valuations.
- There has been no major change to the Fund’s sector allocation.

The S&P 500® Index measures the performance of the broad US stock market. Indices are unmanaged and their returns assume reinvestment of dividends and, unlike mutual fund returns, do not reflect any fees or expenses associated with a mutual fund. It is not possible to invest directly in an index.

A Word about Risk

The Fund generally excludes corporate issuers that do not meet or exceed minimum ESG standards. Excluding specific issuers limits the universe of investments available to the Fund, which may mean forgoing some investment opportunities available to funds without similar ESG standards. At times, the Fund's investments may represent industries or industry sectors that are interrelated or have common risks, making it more susceptible to any economic, political, or regulatory developments or other risks affecting those industries and sectors. These risks may increase share price volatility.
